A CALMER GIFTING PRINTABLE

Gift Budget Tracker

Generosity feels best when it has a gentle plan behind it. This tracker helps you decide — on purpose, in advance — how much feels right for each person, so the season stays warm instead of expensive.

How to use it

1. List every person and occasion you buy for — birthdays, holidays, thank-yous, the neighbor who always shovels your walk.
2. Write the amount you'd plan to spend before you shop. Round, honest numbers are fine: $10, $25, “about $40.”
3. As you buy, fill in Spent. The Left column does the worrying for you.
4. Use page 3 to keep a season total, so one big day never surprises you.
5. If a plan changes mid-season — and it will — just update it kindly and move on.

What's inside

- Page 2 — the per-person tracker: plan, spend, and what's left.
- Page 3 — season totals, gentle tips, and a note for tight months.

> A kind note: a budget isn't a limit on love. It's a promise to your future self that the joy of giving won't turn into the stress of paying for it. People remember thoughtfulness far longer than price tags.

Season Totals

Add up the columns from page 2 — a five-minute check-in that keeps the whole season honest.

The whole picture

Season (e.g., “Holidays 2026”): _____

Total planned: _____ Total spent: _____ Difference: _____

People on the list: _____ Wrapped & done: _____

Gentle tips that actually help

- Decide the season total first, then split it per person — it's easier to shrink a list than to un-spend money.
- Keep a small “surprise fund” line for the gifts you didn't see coming (hostess gifts, the coworker exchange).
- Buy a few steady, crowd-pleasing spares early. Future-you will call this genius.

If money is tight this year: handmade treats, a framed photo, a coupon book of favors, or a long letter cost little and land deep. The people who love you would rather you stayed cozy than went broke.
